Who are Scottish Developers?

The simple answer is: YOU!

Scottish Developers is a not-for-profit community of software professionals from a wide range of organisations and backgrounds.

In June 2003 Scottish Developers held their first day conference in Edinburgh. Twelve months on and we are still going strong.

Many of Scotland's developers have already begun to reap the benefits of free membership.

Members are able to participate in on-line discussions via the web portal's forums.

A centralised Developer Events Calendar captures IT related events across the length and breadth of Scotland and beyond.

Scottish Developers own events take the form of free evening seminars and low-cost conference days. Of course, all the slides and code samples are available for free download!

What to expect from the web portal

It's free and open to all!

The main benefits offered by the web portal:

Articles

Covering hot topics such as eXtreme Programming, project management and technology.

Book & Product Reviews

Hear the truth from fellow developers who have read the books or used the products!

Events Calendar

Events information of interest to developers.

News

A monthly newsletter highlighting site activities and all Scottish Developers news!

Web Links

A comprehensive collection of moderated developer-oriented resources.

Social and Technical Community

Meet up and collaborate with like-minded individuals.
